Project:100 Days™ Integration Consulting Methodology

The Executive's M&A Integration Challenge

After spending months of time and effort, along with incurring significant deal advisory fees and other transaction related expenses to get the deal done...

Executive Management:

- Sometimes loses focus when the deal is signed and the celebration is over.
- Fails to take immediate steps to retain key personnel in both organizations.
- Must deal with both the current business and the newly acquired operations.
- Doesn't provide additional resources to address the "people issues".
- Underestimates the skills, costs, and effort required to integrate two businesses.
- Does not fully comprehend the challenges associated with IT integration.
- Overloads management, inexperienced in M&A, who have daily responsibilities.
- Doesn't consider the toll of time and energy on front-line managers.

Too often, senior executives tell their management teams to just integrate the two companies. The managers then ask "What do we do now?"

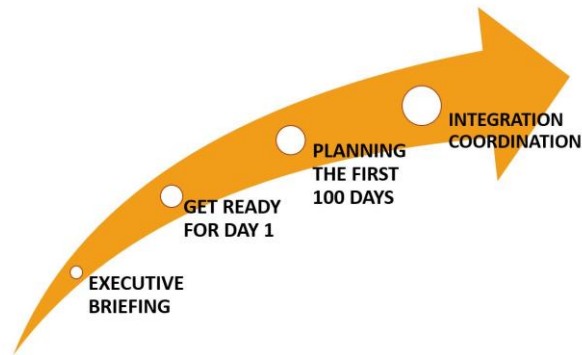

The Solution – Our Project:100 Days™ Methodology

(Typically for deal values less than $100 million)

Our Project:100 Days™ consulting approach, offered as a fixed-fee starting at $50k, is based upon the proven project management approach of identification, assignment, and coordination. This approach is useful for organizations that may have less integration work to do or that have available in-house resources that just require some additional project management organizational structure and expertise.

If internal resources are not available to complete critical tasks, our Workstream Leadership Services are available to provide staff augmentation for the integration project.
